Washington, March [illegible] — Sen. Stephen M. Young (D., Ohio) complained in the Senate today that the government has too many relaxed Americans overseas "living high on the hog."

"Their salaries and allowances and benefits are excessive, and their social life seems active," Young said.

The administration should eliminate at least 10 per cent of its diplomatic, foreign aid and international intelligence employes by not filling vacancies when resignations and retirements occur, he added.

The American traveling abroad, Young said, "will be amazed . . . at the multiplicity of our . . . advisers, observers, consultants, and other representatives . . . in every corner of the globe."

Cites USIA and CIA

He cited employes of the foreign aid agency, the United States information agency, the central intelligence agency, military missions, "and representatives from virtually every federal agency on special missions of one kind or another."

Young said the Congress should have much dog authority over the hush-hush CIA.

"Over the past two years we have seen ample evidence to cause us to doubt the efficiency and good judgment of employes and officials of the CIA," he said.
